A Child's Dream of Heaven. BY VIRGINIA B PASCOE.

"Mama," said little Bessie, one day, "Last night I dreamed of Heaven. I soared above this earth away,

Waiting to be let in, And soon an angel's voice I heard, 'Child, join the host within.'

All wearing crowns of gold, And golden harps within each hand, Their Saviour's face behold." "The sweetest music I ever heard,

"And, Mama, close to Jesus' side Toors was little sister May. I remember whon she died, I cried,

"Her face was radiant with delight, A spotless robe san wors, Her blue eyes beam'd with holy light, Bright as our 'Evening Star.'' "She told me how she came to carth.

Oft saw the falling tear-"When lowly on my kaces I knelt, Praying to be forgiven,

And took me in her arms. Come, little one, thou caus't not stay, 'I'will not be very long-

She held me tighter in her arms, And quickly flew away. "Swiftly thro' the clouds she sped, Down thro' the ether blue, Mama, I woke-io my little bed

THEIR FIRST TUMBLE, -The Southern morning train brought up to Cincinnati the other day a flattering couple of lovers from the Blue Grass regions. He was a tail, lank specimen of a Kentuckian, and she wasa't much bigger than a small jug. Indeed she ppeared not to be more than fourteen. But she loved like older girls, and had bravely resolved to wed her tall lover. The twin went straight from the dippt to the Gibson House, and registered as John T. There was no foolishness about the souple, but they settled right down to wedded life then and there; that is, as soon as the ceremony was finished Joho sat down on the sofa, took his wife on his lap and saluted her in the presence of everybody. Shortly afterward the newly wedded pair started, arm in arm to go down to dioner, while a half hundred ladies and waiters stood around to see how it was done. Just as he head of the dipping room stairs was reached. Jobn's koees gave out, and he went rumpetyrials. The formula and analysis being branded bump bump bump clear to the first landing. As he had his wife's arm hooked on to his arm and forgot to let go, Mrs. J. took the tumble with him. She weat head formost and feiched up in the same way, with her bridal outfit very much disarranged. John hastened to rearrange it and then picked her up.
